

THE MAKER'S BILL OF RIGHTS

■ I will not be window dressing for a 3D printing trade show. ■ If women don't have a pivotal voice at an event, panel or exhibition, I'm not participating. ■ I will not participate in hackathons that exploit talent for free ideas. ■ I have a right to be paid for my creative and technical work. ■ I take a stand against projects that exploit people for the sake of money. ■ I oppose startups and projects that brainlessly throw technology at a problem: technology often creates as many problems as it solves. ■ The world's key problems won't be fixed by simply adding 3D printing, open source and the Arduino. ■ I take responsibility for making objects and the impact they have on people, society and the environment. ■ The term 'maker' no longer belongs to Maker Media – the organization will become irrelevant or die if it continues down a gadget-oriented 'toys for boys' path.
